Freeside Europe Online Academic Journal 2020 Issue

"Stories Across Time and Space"

Kodolányi János University

Freeside Europe Online Academic Journal is an interdisciplinary journal that was first established in 2005. Since the beginning of 2009, the journal has been given a new profile with the aim of connecting the different fields of academic studies (literature, arts, media, intercultural communication, cultural studies, history, linguistics, applied linguistics, translation, and English language teaching) by providing each issue with one particular topic. Through these specific topics we intend to create a platform for discussion that will connect the different areas of the humanities in the form of articles, reviews, interviews or even comments. We hope that by inviting and featuring various perspectives on a current theme we will be able to investigate an issue at greater length and depth.

Freeside Europe welcomes quality work that focuses on research, development, and review.

The 2020 issue of Freeside Europe Online Academic Journal invites submissions that are related to the central unifying theme, "stories across time and space":

- The study of structural levels of any language in synchrony and diachrony: phonetics, morphology, syntax, word formation, vocabulary, and phraseology.
- Current approaches to interpretation and translation of "stories".
- Literary stories across time and space (English Studies, American Studies, Irish Studies, Canadian Studies).
- Transcultural identities and perspectives through stories within literature and/or culture.
- Cultural Studies.
- History and Politics.

All papers will be peer-reviewed and evaluated for their originality, language perspective, and correctness, relevance of topic and presentation quality.

Articles must be 5000 - 7000 words and should not exceed 15 pages.

Reviews must be 1,500-2,500 words (4-6 pages).

Please send an abstract of 150-200 words by 31 October 2020 to freesidejournal@gmail.com
